Q: Prevent html links being clicked I am using jQuery Mobile on a web page and have a problem where users can navigate to other pages by clicking links. I was wondering if there is a way to prevent links from being clicked on this web page, so they cannot be used to navigate away from the page. A: Try this: Update: As OP mentioned he wanted a link to be clickable and not to leave the page. Update 2: In jQuery Mobile CSS in Application page they have this: .ui-page a { cursor: default; } So to make links to leave the page, change the CSS into this: .ui-page a { cursor: auto; } Use the FSDatabase for your facebook apps (Notepad + Facebook SDK) If you want to use the FSDatabase in your Facebook application, you need to modify the filename.php file. In the original file a filepath parameter is passed to the database class. To make the database writeable and be able to read from it, add a few additional parameters to this filepath: The function outputDebug() prints out all the variables, which are passed to the database as parameters. In the FSDatabase constructor two parameters are passed to the database class, databasehost, and database_name (See the FSDatabase constructor above). Damn Yes 4.7 (Yes) 6 ✓ Rated System Info When you check the version of the system that your app will be running on, you might find that your app needs this version of the FSDatabase if the operating system you are developing for does not yet support the FSDatabase (or not all of it). For example, if you are building a FBML application and the user is using an operating system that does not yet have a Facebook application installed, you can add the version of the FSDatabase needed to your FBML code. Then, when the browser requests the content from your application, it will try to use the FSDatabase you added instead of the one shipped with the operating system.Israel: A honeymoon gift

Q: Adding a javascript/html class to a button in rails In Rails, how do you add a class to a button? For example, in a view "do_something" %> How would I add a class="hello" to the button? A: To add some CSS in your views, use = link_to 'Hello', :action => 'do_something', :class => "hello" or, if you want to hook into the html.erb tag for the button, use = button_to "Hello", :action => "do_something", :class => "hello" Romney Op-Ed? AID? Fair warning people: this is going to get me flamed. But I'm going to venture an opinion anyway. You know, give my strong, independent, free-thinking self a chance to take over the hapless body of the blog for a little while. So here goes… On the 19th, 2008, an Illinois state court ruled that Michelle Obama's exercise of her First Amendment right of free speech was an infringement of the constitutional rights of the Marquette University law school. The case was dismissed. It now seems to be the latest, and least likely, star in the craze which is known as "Fired Up!Obama." It seems to me that most people would agree that a teacher, a student, a lawyer, or even a politician – has more freedom to speak his or her mind than an ordinary citizen. If the Marquette University tuition is relatively reasonable in Chicago, some might argue that a student at such a place could obtain financing to attend another school without undue economic distress. Others might argue that a student should be at least encouraged to obtain funding to attend other schools. I'm not trying to defend the legal right of the Marquette University law school to dismiss an instructor simply because his opinions conflict with those of the administration. I could care less about those opinions. But it seems to me that the free speech rights of a professional should be more secure than the free speech rights of a college freshman. After all, the professional has been allowed to obtain a license and/or certification to practice law, medicine, or other professions. I'm not a big fan of President Obama. I find him to
